More countryside to go but who really benefits?

SCARCELY a month passes, it seems, without the threat of another vast housing development chomping up a further chunk of this county's rapidly diminishing countryside.

This week, it came as little surprise to anyone when Ashford councillors decreed that 1,000 acres of farmland at Chilmington Green would serve their residents better as an "urban extension"... or almost 6,000 houses plus associated roads, shops and 'amenities'.

The eloquent, impassioned pleas of opponent after opponent of the scheme in the council chamber counted for nothing, doubtless much as they expected they would.

Why Ashford, which has expanded beyond all recognition in recent years, needs so many homes was not made clear.

In one breath, councillors talked about new houses bringing new people with new ideas to the town.

In the next, they claimed that their children and grandchildren needed places to live and would never be able to leave home otherwise.

Young people need housing they can afford – few would argue against that – but ask those same young people in Ashford if they are able to leave home and join the property ladder and the answer is likely to be that they can't without their parents' help.

The wages available to them in Ashford are too low.

A vast housing estate is not going to make them higher, nor provide them with more jobs, unless they happen to be builders.

If Ashford councillors need convincing of this point, they should look no further than their own town.

Years of seemingly endless housing development have not turned it into the boom town it was supposed to be... a stroll through its centre replete with boarded-up properties is evidence enough of that.

The battle for Chilmington Green has been lost. But it is time for elected representatives across Kent to consider if the craze for housing is giving us the county we all want.

Thanet named worst in county for child poverty

Jamie Weir

jamieweir@archant.co.uk

SOUTH Thanet has been named the worst constituency in Kent for child poverty, according to figures released by the campaign group End Child Poverty.

The figures show that 4,554 children whose parents are in employment are classified as living in poverty in South Thanet.

A further 1,447 children, whose parents are not in work at the moment, are also deemed to be living in poverty.

That means 31.61 per cent of children, or almost a third, in the constituency are considered to be living below the breadline.

Other parts of Kent fare better in the statistics, but many still have more than 25 per cent of children classified as living in poverty. Thanet North also fares poorly in the statistics.

The constituency has a total of 28 per cent of children considered to be living in poverty, while at the other end of the spectrum the best-performing constituency is Sevenoaks, with just 15.7 per cent of children living in low-income families.

Most of the constituencies in Kent have worse statistics than the average throughout the UK, where almost one in six children (15.9 per cent) are classified as living below the poverty line before housing costs.

After housing costs have been taken into consideration, that national average rises to one in four (25.1 per cent) who are considered to live in poverty.

The chairman of End Child Poverty, David Holmes, said:

"These figures reveal just how widely and deeply child poverty reaches into our communities, even those areas generally regarded as well off.

"Far too many children whose parents are struggling to make a living are suffering as a result and missing out on the essentials of a decent childhood that all young people should be entitled to.

"We can and must do better for our children.

"Poverty ruins childhoods and reduces life chances. Failing to invest properly in children is a false economy: already child poverty costs the country £29 billion each year and in the long run taxpayers will foot an even higher bill for correcting the damage.

"We are calling on politicians of all parties to urgently set out a clear roadmap towards ending child poverty, which includes the additional actions needed and the measures by which progress will be tracked."

Theatre director vows to help restore wrecked Eric Morecambe statue

THEATRE director and life-long Eric Morecambe fan Paul Hendy has vowed to help raise the money to fix a statue of the legendary comedian vandalised over the weekend.

Mr Hendy, who along with his wife Emily Wood runs Evolution Productions from their home near Sandwich, has developed close links with the Morecambe family after taking a one-man show featuring Bob Golding on a nationwide tour.

Executive director of the production is Gary Morecambe, the late comic's son.

They were all devastated to learn the statue had been found face-down on the seafloor of Morecambe, Lancashire, at the weekend.

It is believed scrap-metal thieves sawed through the leg of the bronze statue in a bid to sell it for scrap.

The statue was in the dance pose Morecambe and Wise used to end all their shows to the strains of Bring Me Sunshine.

Mr Hendy said: "It is shocking. I can't believe it, really.

"I feel it's unlikely someone has done this out of disrespect – I imagine it was for money.

"Someone may have wanted to sell it for scrap but then been unable to move it.

"If any fund-raising is needed to pay for the work to get him back up standing again, we would be happy to help in any way we can. We will need to wait to be asked by the family if financial help is needed.

"The people of Morecambe, I feel, will be very keen to get him back. He is very good for tourism – Eric was a national icon."

The statue took sculptor Graham Ibbeson six years to complete and was unveiled by the Queen in July 1999.

Eric Morecambe died from a heart attack on stage in 1984 at the peak of his fame.

A spokesman for the British Comedy Society said: "We're very distressed to hear this news.

"What an awful thing to have happened."

Dartford council leader says Tesco treatment is 'scandal'

JEREMY Kite, leader of Dartford Borough Council, has unleashed a blistering attack on retail giant Tesco.

The supermarket was meant to be a major player in the regeneration of Dartford town centre, but a proposed new store has yet to be developed at its Lowfield Street site.

Cllr Kite told a full council meeting this week that a showdown meeting with Tesco bosses last month had been "fractious".

He said: "Tesco's treatment of Dartford has been nothing short of a scandal and although they say no decision has been made to change direction on its Dartford retail scheme I get the impression that they simply don't have a clue what might happen next."

Deadline looming for school place applications, says KCC

FAMILIES of year six children who will be starting secondary school in September 2015 have just a couple of weeks left to submit their application for a place.

Details of the secondary schools in Kent and how to apply can be found in the Admission to Secondary School in Kent 2015 booklet available on the www.kent.gov.uk website.

The deadline for applications is October 31. Families can name up to four preferred schools.

Kent County Council says it is vital that parents carefully consider how their child will get to school before applying for a place.

The council's policy on home-to-school transport shows if there is help available for your child.

Mote Park a winner in green space awards

MOTE Park has been announced as one of the nation's favourite green spaces, taking the silver prize in the Green Flag People's Choice Awards.

It beat off stiff competition from other parks around the country, beating last year's winner and moving one place higher than its 2013 result.

Maidstone council's cabinet member for leisure and culture, John Perry, said: "I am absolutely delighted that our residents and visitors have voted Mote Park as the nation's second favourite park. With such strong competition across the country, this is a fantastic achievement and testament to our volunteers and staff, who work exceptionally hard all year round to keep the park at its best. Thank you to everyone who voted."

The awards, which are organised by Keep Britain Tidy, see coveted Green Flags go to worthy parks.

Spitfire Museum given the land that will secure its future at Manston

Jamie Weir

jamie.weir@archant.co.uk

THE new owners of Manston Airport have given the land that the Spitfire Museum stands on to the Spitfire Museum Trust, ensuring its future on the site.

The museum, which attracts more than 50,000 visitors each year, had been under threat of being forced to leave the site when its lease ended in 15 years. This had prevented the trust from applying for funding vital to its survival.

However, the new owners of the former airport site, Trevor Cartner and Chris Musgrave, have now donated the land's freehold, meaning that the trust can begin to develop the museum's educational facilities and offer further experiences with its aircraft – something that attracts younger audiences.

Spitfire Museum Trust chairman Ken Willis said: "This gift of the land is exciting news.

"It's preferable to extending the lease and puts the trust in a much more secure position by owning the freehold of the building and land.

VOLUNTEERS: receive the deeds

"We've been so impressed that this has all happened so quickly after they bought the site.

"Mr Cartner and Mr Musgrave have been very understanding, particularly in light of our educational aspirations for the museum.

"Their generous gift means the museum can exist in perpetuity for the benefit of the community and visitors from around the world."

Mr Musgrave said: "We recognise the important resource that the museum provides both to the community and aviation and history enthusiasts.

"The Spitfire Museum is an integral part of the Manston site and as such we wanted to protect its heritage.

"By handing over the freehold we know that it is in the best hands for a secure future."

The purchase of the former Manston Airport site by Mr Cartner and Mr Musgrave was announced in September.

The new owners are proposing a £1 billion redevelopment of the 800-acre site over 20 years.

They say it will help to create more than 4,000 jobs.

JOHN FRANKLIN: Found guilty

Sexual assault medic is caged for eight years

A TRAINED medic who sexually assaulted three women under the guise of performing medical assessments has been jailed for eight years.

John Franklin, 39, of Kent Avenue in Sittingbourne, was convicted in February of two counts of sexual assault by penetration on a teenager in Sittingbourne.

However, the jury could not reach a verdict on four other counts relating to other victims – three of sexual assault and one of rape – so sentencing was postponed until the conclusion of a retrial in relation to those charges.

At the retrial last month, Franklin was found guilty of two counts of sexual assault and not guilty of the two other counts.

On Thursday he was jailed for eight years.

Whitstable home to monstrous Crabzilla?

CONTROVERSY has raged this week over a photo showing what appears to be the world's largest crab... in Whitstable.

While some claim that the photo, which shows the creature dubbed 'Crabzilla', proves the existence of the 50ft beast, while others are more sceptical.

The picture shows the outline of a crab in the harbour, at the end of a pier, many times bigger than the surrounding fishing boats, which are dwarfed by its scale.

Because the crab is very similar, if not identical, in form to the common edible crab (which grows to a more realistic five inches in span) some have claimed the images are fake.

One graphic artist claimed that the image would be fairly easy to forge by taking an image of a crab, blowing it up and overlaying it on the aerial shot of the coastline.

The image was originally posted on a local website called Weird Whitstable.

Shopping centre gets £60,000 makeover

THE Centre in Margate is set to have a makeover totaling £60,000 of improvement works.

The Centre was sold in March 2014 after the previous owner fell into administration. The new owner is keen to make The Centre lighter, more open and more a part of the high street.

Thanet District Council is working with the owner to identify suitable tenants as the landlord's current goal is to restore The Centre to full occupancy.

The scheduled work will mean vacant units will be refurbished and upgraded so that new tenants can occupy them straight away.

Thanet council's David Green said: "The Centre is a core part of the shopping offer in Margate and I am delighted that this level of investment is being spent on improvements.

"Not only will the enhancements improve the shopping experience in Margate but bringing derelict shops back into use will create opportunities for local businesses."

Tories prepare to pick by-election candidate

THE Conservative Party is to choose its candidate for the Rochester and Strood by-election on Thursday evening.

The count will take place in the evening, although no details have been confirmed.

More high-profile politicians are also expected in the county next week as the campaign heats up.

The parties are all remaining tight-lipped as to who is coming, but Prime Minister David Cameron, who visited this week, reportedly plans to descend on the constituency four more times between now and the election on November 20.

Cabinet members are expected to do the same, with some backbench MPs making three visits each.

THE county is emerging from the spectre of recession and is at the forefront of growth... the message was loud and clear at the launch of this year's Kent Property Market report.

Described as the annual guide to investment and development in the county, the report details property deals, regeneration projects and initiatives supporting economic development.

Other areas in the spotlight are business parks, rural property, residential sector performance, inward investment and tourism.

The launch, on Wednesday at the Eastgate building in Northfleet, brought together industry figures from such sectors as banking and construction and those at the forefront of local politics, including county council leader Paul Carter, who was a speaker at the event.

The 23rd annual report, carried out for the second time by Caxtons Chartered Surveyors, presented a largely positive message, saying much of the positive message was down to "economic growth in high-value sectors and the availability of financial support packages".

Infrastructure developments were highlighted as particularly significant in Kent's journey to economic recovery, including the announcement of a garden city at Ebbsfleet, the Government's commitment to a third Thames crossing and high-speed rail services.

Along with Cllr Carter, speakers included Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent, an agency that assists companies relocating to the county and is funded by the county council, Medway Council, local councils and the Kent Developers Group.

Also on the bill were Michael Cassidy, chairman designate of the Ebbsfleet Valley Urban Development Corporation; Ron Roser, chairman of Caxtons; and Mark Dance, county council cabinet member for economic development.

Cllr Dance welcomed the positive mood of the report.

He said: "It shows we have real strengths in sectors likely to continue to grow, such as life sciences, low-carbon and environmental goods and services, advanced manufacturing, the land-based economy and the creative and digital industries.

"Supporting this, the £60 million available in financial support programmes to back businesses with the potential for innovation and growth has made a real difference to the task of attracting investment in the county."

Taking to the lectern, Cllr Carter said he was pleased by the results in the report.

He said: "The report is what you would expect as you come out of a recession. Some statistics go the wrong way, but there is an air of optimism – there are some phenomenal successes, like Discovery Park, and now the owners of Discovery Park are substantive owners of the Manston Airport site, which is very exciting."

He was also mindful of the challenges facing the county in the years to come.

"The population of Kent is set to increase by 1 per cent each year. This is an exceptional challenge and we need to think about how we are going to make sure we plan the necessary increase in infrastructure," he said.

"An announcement on a third

HAPPY DAYS: KCC's Paul Carter, second right, with some of the county's economic leaders during the release of this year's Kent Property Market Report

We are emerging from recession is the message from property report

The mood among business leaders in the county is positive that the gloomy days of economic downturn are finally coming to their end, writes Maria Chiorando

Thames crossing is essential. Most of our roads and transport infrastructure is already working at capacity and we need to ensure that this wonderful place to live does not become a congested gridlock."

Another talking point was Paramount London's proposal for a theme park at Ebbsfleet.

Michael Cassidy, of the Ebbsfleet Development Corporation, said: "At first I was a sceptic, but now, having learnt more about the plans, I am a fan.

"I think the team behind it should get support – there have been questions about viability and financial support, but I believe there is a serious team there."

He also spoke about high-speed rail, addressing the question that so many of the county's commuters find important.

He said: "In terms of the fare issue, I think that the pricing structure is not fit for purpose – it's a deterrent. I can't attack the regulated price, but I can attack the element of subsidy."

Residential property performance was, as ever, an important element of the report, which compared local performance with national, saying that "the residential market in Kent continues apace along with the rest of the country, with average house prices rising 5.4 per cent year on year to June 2014 below the UK national average of 11.7 per cent to the same date."

The report also noted that there "has been a reduction of 20 per cent in the number of completions from 2011/2012. This is possibly due to the lack of available sites.

"The Government is looking at ways to stimulate the development of housing to increase the volume of properties on the market and to curb house-price inflation."

Lack of available sites does not appear to be an issue in the future, though. As well as the 15,000 homes planned for Ebbsfleet, another large development, at Chilmington Green, Ashford, was approved this week. The Discovery Park developers are also planning to build 500 houses on the site.

The rural market performed strongly, according to the report, with equipped (including farm buildings and associated infrastructure) arable land prices reaching a record high, in accordance with the national situation.

For the first time, national prices broke the £10,000-per-acre barrier, with equipped land in Kent growing marginally to £9,500 per acre.

Ron Roser, chairman of Caxtons, the main sponsor and contributor to the report, said he was delighted and impressed with the outcome of this year's research.

He said: "On the back of the return to growth in the UK property sector, Kent, along with the rest of the South East, is benefiting.

"New local and central government initiatives have helped to bolster activity, especially with inward investment into the county.

"Approved developments at Ebbsfleet and Swanscombe will ensure sustained sector employment in the area for some time to come and show a massive improvement on the position we were facing 12 months ago.

"Confidence has returned across the county, whether in the commercial or residential field.

"This year's report shows that Kent's property sector is gaining traction in a strong economy and is determined to maximise opportunities.

"A welcome return from the darker days of recession."

“ The report is what you would expect as you come out of a recession. Some statistics go the wrong way, but there is an air of optimism ”

leader of Kent County Council

Apprentice win would be Felipe's first step to changing the world

Jamie Weir speaks to the county's only representative in new series of the BBC show about his motivation in business

BEFORE the middle of this week, the name Felipe Alviar-Baquero was likely to have drawn blank stares from most of us.

However, with this week's return of BBC1 reality contest The Apprentice, the name Felipe will potentially become a household name across the country as the Kings Hill resident goes head to head with 19 other contestants for the opportunity to work with Lord Alan Sugar.

And he put himself straight in the hot seat by choosing to be project manager for the very first show.

In a move that arguably backfired, his team lost the challenge and Mr Alviar-Baquero faced eviction.

Happily, however, he escaped the firing finger of Lord Sugar.

Although you might have got the impression that, like so many Apprentice candidates, he is arrogant, often talking about himself in the third person, Mr Alviar-Baquero is far more complex, with a deep love of both family and, perhaps more unexpectedly for a focused businessman, social justice.

Mr Alviar-Baquero has been sworn to secrecy in relation to the programme itself, but he spoke to KoS, explaining why he had always wanted to be in commerce and how life had led him down that road.

He said: "I always wanted to be an entrepreneur when I was younger.

"As soon as I could, I started selling things and building up my business knowledge. But everything I did in an entrepreneurial way had to have a social impact attached. It wasn't just good enough making money, I wanted to change lives and make the world a better place for people."

That sentiment is one Mr Alviar-Baquero has carried through life as he began two businesses that focus on social change and action to benefit those around him.

He has been involved in a number of charities and is a trustee at the charity Children Of The Andes, a group that works to better the lives of vulnerable children in his home country of Colombia.

As a Colombian, he is well known, once being voted one of the country's most influential people. He has also made an impact in the UK – he was chosen as a torch-bearer during the 2012 London Olympics – with his charity work at the forefront of much of what he does.

He was 18 when he left South America, coming to the UK because he wanted to learn English – his mother Patricia is British – and experience schooling in this country.

But despite his initial enthusiasm he didn't last long at his first school when he arrived.

He said: "I dropped out after just two months of being there when I first came to the UK because I felt it was better to take a different path.

"For me, it was never easy coming to the UK as a Colombian.

"And I thought it was better to leave because academia on its own isn't enough. School gives you tools, but if you have a passion for something you just have to go and do it."

Despite this, Mr Alviar-Baquero ended up completing a degree in law and business administration at the University of Kent before furthering his academic education with a Bachelor of Civil Law at Oxford University – one of his life-long dreams.

He said: "I completed one of my dreams, which was to go to Oxford University. When I was little I only saw it on the TV and it was the place to go."

As a lawyer, the 33-year-old Mr Alviar-Baquero has enjoyed success, starting his career working for international law firm Slaughter and May.

Mr Alviar-Baquero explained why he chose to go into law, saying: "I always wanted to have a big impact on society, make things better, and I thought that the best way to do this was working in business, law and politics.

"These are the big things, where a person can really change things and make life better for others."

It was this desire to make the world a better place that led him down the road of entrepreneurship and was the reason he decided to compete in The Apprentice.

He said: "I always thought of the programme as great because it motivates and encourages young people to have that entrepreneurial spirit.

"It is one of the few programmes which gives a real sense of business and which can cultivate an interest in going out there and doing it. For me, the programme is inspirational."

This drive towards business is one of Mr Alviar-Baquero's greatest passions, but one thing always takes greater priority for him.

He said: "My family is everything to me, it is the biggest part of my life. And they say that behind every man is a greater woman – and that's the case here. My wife Jennie is amazing and has proven a rock for me."

Mr Alviar-Baquero says his family have been the inspiration for what he calls his greatest business achievement so far – a children's play area called Tiny Town in Larkfield.

He said: "My two daughters [seven-year-old Isabella and Sophia, four] were the inspiration behind that business. I love to spend time with them as it really helps me connect with them and I thought it would be a great idea to create something which enables that. Jennie is an occupational therapist, so she was also able to help me make sure Tiny Town was good for children with disabilities. That gives everyone a place to play and a space for children and their parents."

There would seem to be little doubt his previous business exploits have helped people live a better life.

Equally, his charity work helps mark him as an atypical candidate on

The Apprentice. Maybe a candidate not quite ruthless enough for the cut and thrust of Lord Sugar's boardroom?

Either way, a win for Mr Alviar-Baquero would show that the business world can still be place where individuals with a conscience, as well as the brains and the acumen, can make their mark.

That would be one way for him perhaps to change the environment of commerce... and make it just that little bit better.

TALKING POLITICS: Prime Minister David Cameron addressed constituents from Rochester and Strood in an effort to drum up support after former Tory MP Mark Reckless defected to Ukip

Vote for Ukip would risk return to instability, claims Cameron

Maria Chiorando attends Tory leader's visit to Rochester and Strood ahead of forthcoming by-election

AS PRIME Minister David Cameron started the first of a series of visits to the Rochester and Strood constituency, it seemed there was definitely a touch of the purple panic following Mark Reckless's defection to Ukip.

Mr Cameron was in town on Thursday to showcase the two Conservative candidates, one of whom will be chosen to represent the party following this Thursday's postal vote.

The successful candidate will then stand against Mr Reckless in the by-election on Thursday, November 20.

The Tory leader visited the Wainwright Memorial Hall to talk at a residents' meeting and give people a chance to grill the prospective candidates.

He told the crowd: "The reason we are here today is because the MP who was voted in for Rochester and Strood has chosen to change sides.

"He has let people down, but we need to look to the future and do everything we can to make sure Rochester and Strood have the best candidate for the by-election.

"I really want to give you the very best choice."

Describing Mr Reckless's defection as "baffling", he went on to highlight the importance of voting for a new Conservative candidate.

He said: "All of you are going to have a say in which one of these Conservatives is the candidate – you get to make that choice.

"I am not standing here saying we have solved all of the problems in

SO WHO'S IN THE RUNNING TO REPLACE MARK RECKLESS?

AS part of Mr Cameron's visit, the prospective Conservative candidates also attended the meeting.

Medway councillor Kelly Tolhurst and Sevenoaks councillor Anna Firth briefly introduced themselves before taking questions from the crowd.

Mrs Firth said: "The first thing I want to say is that I am delighted that the Prime Minister has come down here today.

"I got involved in politics because I wanted to stand up and make a difference to my community.

"That's why I'm a councillor, that's why I'm a governor."

Her main concerns were health care, as Medway Maritime Hospital is in special measures, primary-school places, and "standing up for our countryside and green open spaces".

Ms Tolhurst was keen to emphasise her connection to the area.

She said: "I am your local candidate. I understand the local people because I am one of you.

"I represent you as a councillor. I wanted to get involved to play a part in making decisions affecting my friends and family."

Ms Tolhurst said she "cared deeply" about hospitals, saying that Medway had "saved her life" last year.

Schools and development were also on her agenda.

She said: "I want developments in Rochester and Strood to be the right kind of developments with the infrastructure in place."

the UK, or even all of the problems in Rochester, but we do have a good long-term economic plan.

"I am very keen that the person you send to Parliament will back that long-term economic plan – and it will be your choice in the by-election who you send to Westminster.

"It will be better if you send someone who can be part of the team."

Inevitably the question of immigration came up, with Mr Cameron asked for reassurance that ethnic minority groups would not become an "easy target".

Mr Cameron said: "Ethnic minority groups are part of the rich fabric that makes up our country. They make a very valuable contribution.

"I think we need to be clear about that, and at the same time be clear that the immigration system has not been working properly.

"I often get people from Britain's ethnic minority communities who say they are frustrated, as someone who came to build a life here, who came here fairly, that the immigration system isn't reformed.

"We've made sure that people who can come here and make a contribution do so, but we've also, for example, closed down 700 bogus education colleges that were set up as visa factories to allow people to come who didn't really have a right to be here.

"We've dealt with some of the issues, but there's more that we need to do."

Talking to journalists after the meeting, he addressed the issue of Ukip, denying allegations that he had underestimated the party. He claimed that a vote for anyone other than the Conservatives would "risk a return to the instability, the insecurity, the economic failure of the past".

He said: "In the forthcoming by-election, if you vote Ukip you are really just giving Nigel Farage the chance for a long gloat in the pub – and another mark forward to Ed Miliband being installed in 10 Downing Street.

"Whereas if you vote Conservative you are going to have a chance of one of two extremely able candidates who will stand up and fight for this area."

Following Mr Reckless's defection, a number of angry Conservatives have very publicly insulted the new Ukip recruit.

Mr Cameron commented on how he thought this may have affected voters.

He told KoS: "I understand that some people would feel very let down.

"You have to remember that there are lots of people who work to elect a Conservative Member of Parliament, who would have knocked on a lot of doors, trodden on a lot of pavements, delivered a lot of leaflets, who felt that they were part of a Conservative-led government.

"They feel very let down when the Member of Parliament, for no apparent clear reason, decides to change horses.

"The absolutely key thing he cared about – a referendum for Europe – is actually guaranteed by the Conservative Party and only by the Conservative Party.

"I understand people's upset and how cross people can be about this, but now we need to look to the future."

Continuing the Ukip theme, Mr Cameron vowed that there would be no deals or pacts with Mr Farage's party.

"We are a Conservative party, we stand everywhere in the country, we aim to win the next election outright and we believe that it is possible.

"We're demonstrating, particularly with economic and other changes we've made, that we can give this country a more stable and secure future. So no pacts, no deals, we're fighting outright."

Voters love us more than the Tories, says the MP who left them behind

Ukip candidate Mark Reckless told Sarah Linney that Conservative Party members had promised him their secret support in the Rochester and Strood by-election scheduled for November 20

UKIP launched their Rochester and Strood by-election campaign at the weekend claiming that dozens of card-carrying Conservative Party members are set to desert their party at the ballot box.

Mark Reckless, the Tory MP who resigned the seat last month and caused the by-election, told KoS that his former party colleagues had promised him their support in droves.

"Dozens of Tory members have said they are going to be voting for me secretly in the ballot box," he said. "A lot of them voted Tory in 2010 because they believed what the Tories said in their manifesto: that they'd cut immigration and deal with the deficit. But those promises haven't been kept. That's why I moved."

The Ukip triumvirate of party leader Nigel Farage, Mr Reckless and new MP Douglas Carswell launched the campaign outside the party's new campaign office in Rochester High Street last Saturday.

Though there was not quite the media scrum that had surrounded Mr Carswell following his victory in Clacton two days before, dozens of people packed the High Street, including former MP Bob Spink – who crossed the floor to join Ukip in 2008 but was never elected under the party banner – as well as activists from across Kent and Sussex.

Mr Farage told the excited crowds: "So much of how people vote is about perception. The Liberal Democrats had this for decades – people were not going to vote for them because they couldn't win. That's been our problem. The perception has been that it is difficult for us to win elections under the first-past-the-post system."

"Clacton has blown that out of the water. People voted Ukip and they got Ukip. We will be targeting everyone in this campaign."

Mr Reckless has been accused of betraying the party by his former colleagues and, most notably, reportedly called a "fat arse" by Prime Minister David Cameron.

But he said he would "not be responding in kind" and would be fighting a "positive campaign based on local issues" – such as his opposition to the development of protected countryside at Lodge Hill.

"I believe I have a fighting chance," he said. "I am getting a fantastic reception on the doorstep, a lot better than I ever got as a Conservative. I'll be delivering leaflets and people will rush out of their houses asking for a poster."

"There's a sense of belief that I've not seen in politics for 20 years."

Mr Carswell – who re-won his seat in Clacton with a 12,000 majority after leaving the Tories to join Ukip in August – described Mr Reckless to KoS as an "exceptional man".

"He is a decent, honourable, patriotic, diligent candidate," Mr Carswell said.

"I would quite often knock on his door before a late-night vote, long after other MPs had stopped working, and find him responding to everyone who had got in touch with him."

"He tried to make a habit of responding to letters on the day he got them. There are very few MPs who do that. Most MPs I know have an army of staff who respond, but he would respond to everything personally."

Mr Carswell was so intent on running a clean election campaign that he banned his team from saying anything negative about the other candidates even among themselves – and warned one press officer, whom he had overheard doing so, that he would be asked to leave the team if he did it again.

He said Mr Reckless should be praised for calling a by-election, rather than being labelled a traitor.

"He didn't have to call this election and I don't think anyone can really dispute what an honourable thing it is for him to have done."

"The devious thing to do would have been to

“It takes extraordinary courage to say ‘I am going to quit a safe seat and subject myself to high scrutiny’. It’s a very difficult decision to take – you can’t accuse him of taking the easy option.”

LET BATTLE COMMENCE:
Mark Reckless and Nigel Farage outside Ukip's Rochester HQ

carry on pretending David Cameron is the answer to this country's problems when he is not. Whatever personal abuse the party machine levels at him, they can't take away the fact that he has given local people the final choice.

"It takes extraordinary courage and guts to say 'I am going to quit a safe seat and subject myself to high scrutiny'. It's a very difficult decision to take – you can't accuse him of taking the easy option."

And Mr Carswell should know. He started reconsidering his position in the Conservative Party as far back as February – six months before he finally left to join Ukip.

"I started to have sleepless nights and serious concerns," he said.

"Zac Goldsmith had brought forward a proposal for recall, and disgracefully the whips' office sabotaged it. And I thought 'Do these guys really share my values?'."

"I could have sat in the House of Commons and thought the Government has failed to deliver on its promises and muddled along trying not to think too much.

"But a thought became an idea, then a proposal, then a concrete conviction."

His disillusionment extended not just to the Tory party but to Westminster politicians as a whole. The values of people in Westminster are not the same as the values elsewhere," said Mr Carswell.

"These people believe that when you have a problem in a country, you make a speech. I would sit in the Commons and I would hear party leaders come in and talk about what speech they needed to give. It was never about what actions they needed to take. Talk is all they do and some of them will say whatever it takes to keep office.

"For years in this country it has been a two-party system, but the two parties are different in the manner of Tweedledee and Tweedledum.

"They prop each other up out of fear – they tell their voters 'Vote for us or the other one will get in'. Now the potential for real change is there."

He said he would not be surprised if more defections followed.

"I don't think we should assume that this will be the only by-election.

"There are many MPs who are so disappointed that they are announcing they are not going to be standing again in 2015. I suspect some of them will be thinking maybe they should have done what Mark did and I hope our example encourages more people.

"They don't get it in Westminster. This is not what they think it is. It is people from all backgrounds who have said 'Enough!'. There is something unpredictable happening, a spirit of change, and I don't quite know how it ends."

He said he had found sympathy for his decision to leave among party colleagues.

"Before I made the announcement, I discussed my decision with a number of Tory MPs.

"The fact that it didn't leak shows that they are good friends. Most said they didn't think I should do it but that they respected my decision and wanted to remain friends.

"Two members of the Cabinet have texted me since I was re-elected and said they are there for me if I ever need help with anything."

KENT'S Labour politicians have thrown their weight behind party leader Ed Miliband despite growing concern over his ability to win the general election.

The Opposition leader came under attack from one of his own MPs this week following Labour's near-defeat by Ukip in the Heywood and Middleton by-election.

Graham Stringer, MP for the Greater Manchester constituency of Blackley and Broughton, told BBC Radio 4's Today programme: "If you go on the doorstep, Ed isn't an asset to us. They [voters] think he doesn't understand the problems they are suffering. You can't hope to win elections if you don't talk about what the people are talking about."

"I think the team around him is hopeless. They give him very bad advice and collectively they don't have the breadth of experience that Ed needs. People have to believe what we say – presently, they don't."

But Gordon Cowan, Labour leader on Kent County Council, said criticisms of Mr Miliband were "absolute nonsense".

"He has done a marvellous job," Cllr Cowan told Kent on Sunday.

"Lots of people on the doorstep have said he's a strong leader. I have met him a few times and he can draw crowds around him and is very open to letting people fire questions at him and answering them in a true manner."

"Our membership is going up nationally by thousands. In my branch last week we got three new members, and we didn't have new members coming in from about 2010 to 2013."

LABOUR TROOPS GIVE MILIBAND THEIR SUPPORT

"And of course we are focusing on the right issues – what could be more important than the NHS?"

He admitted he was not confident that Labour would win an overall majority and that their lead in the polls was smaller than he would like but said he felt this was not related to Miliband's leadership.

"The electorate are disillusioned with all politicians. The trust really started to be taken out of politics in the expenses scandal and they think they [politicians] are all the same, which is sad," Cllr Cowan said.

"To try to get that back I think we have to be totally honest with people. I don't tell people I will change the world – I say I will work as hard as possible to try to achieve the goals you want me to achieve."

"Heywood and Middleton was disappointing, but I think there is sometimes complacency. My ward is a staunch Labour ward, but so often the voters don't come out because they think we are going to get in anyway."

"I believe we will be the largest party at the election and I dearly hope we could get overall control, but I am being realistic – the next government is likely to be a coalition again, although who we would go into coalition with I couldn't say."

Medway Labour leader Vince Maple's endorsement of his leader was similarly glowing.

"I think he will be the next Prime Minister," said Cllr Maple.

"The policies that he's put forward – on the cost of living, zero-hours contracts and the NHS – resonate with people."

"I have seen Ed in action and he has the ability to not just listen but to hear, and act on that, and make sure party policy is in line with what people are saying."

"I am proud to have voted for Ed in the leadership election and I would do so again in a heartbeat."

He said he felt Miliband had been given "a hard time" from certain sections of the media.

"He has been given excess scrutiny over small issues," Cllr Maple said.

"How people eat their sandwiches is not overly important when it comes to how in touch they are. If people come and look at me eating Greggs, they are not going to get a good look – anyone having something to eat is not going to make a good photo opportunity."

"If you want the photocall, he is not your man. But I think people want more from their political leaders than a soundbite on the TV or hugging huskies."

But, again, he was not confident of an overall majority for Labour in the general election.

"History shows us that when Labour have been voted out, they don't win the next election," Cllr Maple said.

"But I am confident that we are doing everything we can and I think we will do very well across the country. Our percentage of the vote in Heywood and Middleton went up 1 per cent, whereas the Tory and Lib Dem votes both dropped by double percentage figures."

One Kent politician who has not been Miliband's biggest fan in the past is Chatham and Aylesford prospective parliamentary candidate Tristan Osborne.

In May, just before the European elections, the Daily Mail reported him as being taped saying that the party was running a "dodgy campaign" with "no coherent messaging".

"I'm fearful. The machine is not functioning in any capacity," Mr Osborne was reported as saying.

"We need to be appealing to the aspirational southern voter, and the current strategy doesn't... indicate that we are winning over that type of support."

However, Mr Osborne told Kent on Sunday that he had been "quoted out of context" and had since changed his mind about Mr Miliband.

"I did say those things, but I didn't give permission for that to be produced and it was during the European election campaign," he said.

"Ed is a good leader and I am certain we will win the election with an overall majority with him as

PLANNING OUR JOURNEYS: New Southeastern managing director David Statham foresees a better experience ahead for Kent's legions of rail travellers over the next four years of its franchise

Right kind of trains on the line, promises Southeastern

AS SOUTHEASTERN embarks on the latest chapter of its time in control of the majority of the county's rail services, its new managing director has embarked on a charm offensive with its weary passengers.

The opening salvo will be a slew of special offers set to roll out over the coming weeks.

But it may be too little too late after a recent survey of travellers found a continuing trend of dissatisfaction.

And the majority of the gripes, unsurprisingly, centred on the ever-increasing cost of tickets.

On the first day of the firm's new four-year contract to run services – a decision deemed controversial after it was not put out to tender and set amid a background of commuter dissatisfaction – its new managing director, David Statham, insisted the firm would not be resting on its laurels and it would start by revamping its leisure travel offering.

"There will be a much greater range of fares from January," said Mr Statham, the 46-year-old who came

David Statham, the new man leading Kent's rail company, spoke to regular user Sarah Linney about his plans to woo his passengers with improvements to services and rolling stock as well as offers to tempt more leisure travellers to Southeastern from First Capital Connect, which itself was replaced by the Thameslink, Southern and Great Northern 'super franchise' earlier this year.

He said there would be more super off-peak fares and internet-only fares with discounts.

"For example, you will be able to get a day return from Margate to London for £22.40 instead of £33.70.

"We will also be offering 25 per cent off off-peak fares in the run-up to Christmas."

There's also the long-discussed idea of extending the popular Oyster card system as far into Kent as Dartford and Swanley.

But the reality is that it will probably take a lot more to persuade often long-suffering commuters. Figures released on Monday in a survey commissioned by BBC Radio Kent, as part of a day-long series of special reports on the radio station, make for grim reading.

Fewer than a third of its customers think it is good value for money.

Among its biggest users that drops to just over a fifth. And most of them would rather it disappeared from their lives altogether.

To some extent, it is part of life as a passenger on trains that you complain about them.

They're late, they're expensive, they're dirty, they're full of other people... those grievances have been around since long before the days when Southeastern was in charge.

But why, when commuters are paying thousands of pounds a year for the privilege of travelling, is it seemingly so hard for Kent's train operator to provide a service that those who use it are satisfied with?

The report found 30 per cent of passengers thought the company provided good value for money – a figure that dropped to 27 per cent among commuters and 22 per cent among season-ticket-holders.

Just 45 per cent wanted the company to run services in the county over the next four years.

Surprisingly perhaps in light of the above, 70 per cent said they were satisfied with the operator – although the figure fell to 64 per cent among commuters and 60 per cent among season-ticket-holders. The annual hike in ticket prices is dictated by the Government, continuing a policy that sees users of the rail network pay a bigger slice of the cost of running it rather than the taxpayer.

But the deals Southeastern has unveiled are unlikely to benefit the London-bound commuters who pay the most for its services – thousands of pounds a year in most cases.

Those who benefit from the popular high-speed service typically pay a premium of about 30 per cent for the privilege.

Mr Statham justified the extra expense by the money invested in the service: "There was a huge amount of investment put into the high-speed services, into specialist signalling equipment, for example, and the money has been used to fund the service."

"The assumption was that the prices on the high-speed would be greater than on the rest of the network – it is very reliable, with a really good standard of on-board service."

He justified the huge differential between off-peak and peak services by saying that it reflected the available capacity at different times.

For example, a day return to London St Pancras from Ashford on the high-speed line costs £32.50 off-peak and £63.60 during peak times.

"We want to make sure people have the choice to travel on a cheaper service. People like choice and they like to be able to fix their journeys to suit them."

"There has been lots of research done, and the research tells us people want choice," he insisted.

"They want to be able to pick and choose fares and they want a simple ticketing system."

"And we can't offer extremely low fares as we have a limited amount of capacity – there isn't unlimited capacity to carry those people."

As anyone who has ever taken a train on the Continent will know, European countries seem to manage it. But Mr Statham said Britain would need to fund its railways differently if there was to be a drop to Continental levels of pricing.

"It's about whether it's the taxpayer or the passenger paying. In lots of European countries the railways are funded by the taxpayer," Mr Statham explained.

"Whereas this is the first year in Britain that the passenger is funding more of the cost of the railways than the taxpayer."

"Submitting our bid to renew the franchise was a very intensive process and it took us more than a year to come to a deal."

"We are taking less of a subsidy under this deal than the previous one – the amount of money we take from taxpayers is very marginal."

"There is a cap on our profits – it's

“ There is a cap on our profits – it's about 3 per cent – so there will be no super-profits. We are not going to be able to make limitless amounts of money. ”

David Statham,
Southeastern's new MD on profits about 3 per cent – so there will be no super-profits.

"We are not going to be able to make limitless amounts of money. If we go above that the Government will take a greater and greater percentage of our funds."

But he refused to blame lack of Government funding for the high prices.

"I am not going to point the finger at the Government," Mr Statham said.

"We sell you your ticket. It is up to us to provide a service that's value for money. We see the reaction from passengers and we realise there's a lot of work to do in making sure we regain people's trust and push the levels of satisfaction back up again."

"Last year we had our highest-ever levels of customer satisfaction, at 84 per cent, and that has dropped."

One factor unlikely to increase passenger satisfaction is the impending disruption at London Bridge.

A three-year revamp of the station will see no Charing Cross trains stop there for 18 months from January.

After that, no Cannon Street trains will stop there for a further 18 months, which will undoubtedly cause difficulties for commuters used to getting off at the station.

But, as Mr Statham pointed out, the work is necessary as the station has become far too small for the number of passengers and trains travelling through it, leading to congestion and delays as trains cross each other's paths and block each other's way.

Southeastern also promises to open services travelling from Kent directly through London, cutting down on transfers from major terminal to major terminal across the capital.

Mr Statham added: "A thousand trains a day go through London Bridge. Platform Six is the busiest railway platform in Europe."

"The station needs to be able to cope with a lot more passengers. There is not enough space for trains, not enough platforms, and it restricts the services we can offer."

"The revamp is one of the biggest railway construction projects since the Second World War and will allow it to cope with 50 per cent more passengers."

"It will deliver a brilliant concourse – as big as Wembley."

Mr Statham says Southeastern is trying its hardest to minimise the disruption to passengers.

"There are real challenges and we have been talking to passengers about this for at least a year."

"But lots of people in Kent, almost uniquely across the rail network, have a choice of London terminals."

"We are taking on 170 extra staff for 10 weeks when the timetables change, both times, and we are also extending the opening hours of Cannon Street and employing 29 extra staff there."

And he says Southeastern, which carries some 300,000 passengers (around 570,000 journeys) a day – a 33 per cent increase since 2006 – has much to be proud of.

"The high-speed line was a great thing for Kent," Mr Statham said.

"What's important for me over the next few years is that we focus on what's important to passengers: better punctuality, better information, a better environment."

EAR-TO-EAR WITH COMMUTERS

ON Monday, just before speaking to KoS, David Statham, who replaced Charles Horton as Southeastern managing director, took part in a live mid-morning BBC Radio Kent round-table discussion with a number of commuters at Charing Cross.

They painted a frustrating picture of weekly delays, lack of information, dirty, soapless toilets and skyrocketing prices.

"Soon I will need a mortgage to pay for my fare," one commuter from Rainham, who gave his name as John, told the programme.

"I think the fares are out of control and I don't think there should be any rise at all this year given the performance we have had over the last 18 months.

"There is an assumption that we can fleece the commuters."

He said that when trains from Victoria were disrupted one night he had asked if he could use the high-speed line instead and initially been told no – despite paying more than £5,000 a year for a season ticket.

"When I did get on the high-speed, it broke down outside Stratford," he said.

"There are signal failures between Medway and London every week. I have to give myself an extra hour to get to work. The high-speed service from Medway is not packed – you could let people get on these trains and get to work.

"Quite often when there are major delays, some of us end up issuing more information, and more accurate information, than you do, which is frustrating."

Mr Statham said the company had invested £8 million in train equipment and was investing £500,000 in cleaning in the next few months, as well as improving the toilets on 190 trains.

"Seventy per cent of delays are caused by infrastructure and we are working very hard with Network Rail to address those problems – they are investing £145 million in upgrading the network."

Network Rail is responsible for tracks and signals – the basic rail infrastructure, Southeastern for operating the rail service.

"We are also adding 2,000 extra seats in evening peak times by lengthening trains, plus 1,000 extra seats on the high-speed at peak times.

"We are investing in more information screens and are bringing more people into the Twitter team, as well as about 100 more frontline staff over the next three and a half years.

"We are committed to being more transparent and we will be publishing our performance by route and our performance targets in our customer magazine this week."

All very nice. But will this actually make a real difference to the experience, and the pocket, of passengers forced to fork out for a service they consider sub-standard?

The Government has told train companies they cannot raise peak-time fares by more than the rate of inflation this year, but there is no such ruling on off-peak fares.

However, Mr Statham said the company would be stepping up its efforts to attract leisure travellers with a range of special offers.

Magical memories of a saggy old

ON SET: Peter Firmin and his daughter Emily outside her fabulous shop

Peter Firmin and Oliver Postgate's characters were a special part of growing up for many of us. Oliver's son Daniel spoke to Chris Murphy about a new book celebrating their work.

FOR many, the images will immediately remind them of warm childhood memories – classic characters brought to life by a partnership that delighted a generation.

Now the artistic talents of Peter Firmin and Oliver Postgate are being portrayed for the first time in a coffee-table book.

The pair created some of the most memorable children's characters, among them Bagpuss, the Clangers, Ivor the Engine and the Pogles.

Included in the glossy pages are fresh shots of some of the other lesser-known creations for their own production company, Smallfilms.

Much of the magic was created at the pair's studios in Blean, near Canterbury. Mr Postgate died in 2008, but his son Daniel is delighted with the resulting book.

Published by Four Corners Books, the Art Of Smallfilms shows the evolution of the myriad of puppets the pair dreamt up and made.

Daniel Postgate, who lives in Whitstable, said: "They are such endearing characters, all of them, and that is why they are still so popular today."

He said: "This is something Peter Firmin and the publishers organised.

"It is all about his imagery and puppets. It's a great book and gives a quality to Peter's work which he deserves. It is an art book looking at his creations in an artistic way, as artefacts as opposed to characters in a TV programme.

"It casts a fresh eye over Peter's drawings and puppets."

In an age before computers were widely used to create effects, the duo, working from their Blean barn, produced some of television's most delightful icons that have survived in memories for decades.

Mr Postgate, who is still working on a new Clangers series to be broadcast early next year, said: "They look great. It is a great book for people interested in all aspects of Smallfilms and Peter's work, and it's not too expensive – it's a good solid big book."

Some of the pictures used are from Mr Firmin's personal collection and some new images, re-imagined using the original puppets.

"We got all the puppets together and did a load of new-age photos of them – it was great revisiting them, live photographing them.

"Some of them look a bit worn – they have been around the block, so they have a certain bashed-about look, which is quite nice really. They have got a bit older, just like everybody else."

He says some of the shots do show the amount of work that went into producing the puppets – like Bagpuss's paws, for instance. One shot from below clearly shows the intricacy of the stitching needed.

Other show the characters from the rear, so it becomes a little clearer how they were operated.

Mr Postgate said: "This means you step back from them as characters and look at them in a new way, in an abstract way, really.

"There is a shot of Madeleine the rag-doll showing the back of her, where you can see the workings. It's an intriguing look behind the curtain to see how things were made, the armatures used and the skeletons of the Clangers."

He said: "I think what people like about their work is the integrity of the characters. You get the feeling that if the camera was off they would carry on with their lives.

"I am delighted there is now a coffee-table book with Peter's and my dad's work in it."

The Art of Smallfilms, from Four Corner Books, is priced at £25.

TIMES are changing at the Dartford Crossing and now we have an idea of how the link between Kent and Essex will look after the introduction of Dart Charge.

This is the new system that should help traffic flow more easily.

Toll-booths will be removed and replaced by a remote payment system in which drivers will be able to pay online, by phone, by post or at one of thousands of Payzone outlets nationwide, either in advance of their journey or by midnight on the day after it.

Cameras will be installed to ensure the toll is paid. If you don't pay for your crossing by midnight the day after your journey, you will be issued with a penalty-charge notice.

This is £70 but reduced to £35 if you pay within 14 days. If the penalty charge is not paid within 28 days, it will increase to £105.

There are enforcement arrangements in place across Europe, so the charge can be effectively implemented both in the UK and abroad.

The 27-lane payment plaza will be replaced by four open lanes in each direction.

Work to remove the booths will coincide with Dart Charge going live in late November and is expected to be finished next spring.

Dart Charge project director Nigel Gray said: "It's only when the booths have been removed that the full benefits of Dart Charge will be felt and we will get under way on this work at the same time that the new payment arrangements begin.

"It's complicated work, especially on the northbound carriageway, where we need to protect the tunnels – one of which was built in the 1960s and has a lower height restriction – from over-height vehicles.

"We'll be completely redesigning the approach to the tunnels to detect and turn around these vehicles and other vehicles not suitable for the tunnels, using a system of signals, barriers and extra lanes, while keeping all other traffic flowing as much as possible."

SMOOTH OPERATOR: Toll-booths will be removed to allow traffic to move more freely

A2 roadworks have turned our lanes into rat-runs, say locals

...but Highways Agency claims consultation meant the best options were chosen, reports Jamie Weir

CARNAGE on the roads. We can only hope that such a drastic forecast will not come to pass, but the emotive language highlights the frustrations of motorists and residents alike as they try to deal with the closure of the A2, one of the county's most important trunk roads.

People living in villages around Canterbury say they have been plagued by drivers using country lanes as rat-runs, while drivers say signage is poor and that they have been forced to take a detour almost 40 miles out of their way.

The road has been shut to allow sections along a six-mile stretch between the Brenley Corner roundabout and Wincheap to be rebuilt.

A stretch of coastbound road has been closed every weekend, with nine weekend closures predicted by the Highways Agency, which is running the project.

Traffic heading for Dover is being directed along the Thanet Way (A299), on to the A253 and then past Sandwich and Whitfield on the A256 to the port. Drivers wanting to get into Canterbury will need to make their decisions as to which route they take.

Tim Smith works in Boughton-under-Blean, one of the villages to have felt the force of the road closure. He told KoS the situation was dire.

"The road closure has had a serious impact in the area. There have been a number of problems, with a lot of the roads getting totally clogged up during the busier parts of the day.

"But the really dangerous thing is people trying to find a way around the road closure and following their sat navs around the country roads.

"There are a lot of cars on the country lanes and it's obvious when they don't know where they're going.

"They'll speed up, slow down and come to a stop as their drivers consult the map or sat nav and that's dangerous for other road-users in the area, especially when the volume of traffic is so much higher."

That is a sentiment echoed by John Gilbey, leader of Canterbury City Council. He highlighted the problem of following sat navs at Denstroude Lane, near Dunkirk.

He said: "I've had reports that Denstroude Lane, which is a small country lane, was totally gridlocked last weekend. It was chock-full of HGVs following their sat navs and then, as a result, getting stuck.

"It's a small country lane, which makes it totally inappropriate for large vehicles to be trailing down, and it ends up being quite unsafe."

And Cllr Gilbey, who represents Blean on the city council, says that his ward has been inundated with traffic as vehicles drive through the area.

He said: "The signage has been absolutely abysmal in the area. There are signs on the M25 which are utterly useless for drivers who end up at Brenley Corner roundabout with little knowledge that the road ahead is closed off to them.

"That leads to cars and lorries deciding to try and come through Canterbury, which has left my ward in Blean absolutely gridlocked.

"It has also meant that Canterbury has ended up with severe tailbacks on the ring road which stretch all the way up to Blean."

According to Cllr Gilbey, that has had other knock-on effects on the city, causing problems for retailers in the run-up to the Christmas shopping season.

He said: "It has caused problems for retailers who have suffered as a result of lost trade because no one can get into the city to do their shopping.

"The retailers have, in turn, come to the council to ask what we are doing about the issue.

"We've ended up speaking to the university and signposting a bus service where shoppers can park there and then catch the bus down.

"But it has not been easy for us and shops have lost business as a result of the poor job the Highways Agency has done with its signage."

Tara Birks, the landlady at The White Horse Inn in Boughton-under-Blean, is similarly unimpressed, saying that the A2 closure is not only killing trade but causing other problems in the area.

"I just don't understand why the Highways Agency is making life so difficult for locals in the area," she said. "We aren't getting the passing trade which we have normally do and hotel bookings have dropped considerably.

"For people who don't have cars in the area, it is an absolute nightmare as public transport isn't coming through the village to get them to Canterbury.

"For the people who live locally and know the back roads it isn't so bad, but for those who are just trying to pass through, or get to the village, there are all number of issues.

"It is made worse due to the fact that the Highways Agency just don't seem to care about the problems being caused – I've spent hours on the phone to them.

"And to make matters worse, this is going on in the run-up to Christmas, during the pub's busiest period."

Cllr Gilbey also took aim at the

“For people who live locally and know the back roads it isn't so bad, but for those just trying to pass through there are all number of issues”

Tara Birks, of The White Horse Inn in Boughton-under-Blean

JAM-PACKED: Canterbury City Council leader John Gilbey, right, understands frustrations caused by the closure manner in which the Highways Agency had decided the diversions and signage.

He said: "The consultation that the Highways Agency had with Canterbury City Council was negligible. It didn't involve us nearly enough in deciding what would happen with these works."

The Highways Agency, however, does not accept that, saying that consultation with the local council, as well as with other groups, was full and proper.

A spokesman said: "The A299/A256 diversion was agreed following consultation with Kent Police, Kent County Council and Canterbury City Council as being the most sensible option, as those roads are high-speed and have few junctions."

There is criticism of the route that has been put in place for drivers travelling to the Port of Dover.

At some 40 miles out of their way, it is a cost that many hauliers can not afford, according to Terry Hudson, spokesman for the Alliance of British Drivers in Kent.

Mr Hudson, who lives in Whitstable, told KoS: "Obviously the Highways Agency has got a very difficult problem as the road's crumbling and it needs to be fixed.

"However, for such an important international road, which has so much freight going to Europe, there needs to be much, much better signage.

"Lorries shouldn't have to take a 40-mile detour just to get to the port. That's a massive addition to the expense of hauling goods and so it's understandable that those vehicles want to try to dodge the problem by taking short-cuts down country lanes.

"The signage is awful for car-drivers as well, which means they end up having to go miles out of their way or getting stuck down country lanes swamped with traffic as well.

"It obviously needs to be done, but I wonder whether it could have been done in a better way."

The Highways Agency insists that the diversion – 38.8 miles, to be precise – should only take an extra 15 minutes.

The spokesman for the agency said:

"Alternative diversion routes using local roads or the M20 would have resulted in longer journey times to Dover."

And, as if accepting that the signage was insufficient, the agency said it was doing work to improve it.

"Following feedback since the work has started, we have installed additional signage to advise road-users of the diversion routes to Dover and Canterbury and we strongly encourage drivers to use these while we complete this necessary work, which will replace 30-year-old infrastructure and lessen the likelihood of individual emergency closures and repairs in the future," said the spokesman.

Mr Hudson, meanwhile, doubtless spoke for many motorists when he said: "I just hope that they've actually repaired it for the long term this time.

"Too often we see shoddy work done, which means that the road needs to be dug up and resurfaced again a couple of years after it was last done.

"All we can really hope for at this point is that it is done well and doesn't need to be fixed any time soon."

EXTREME HIGHS: Acrobatic troupe Flown and renowned musician Hugh Masekela will be wowing the festival-goers

IT HAS established itself as one of the county's premier cultural highlights, offering a smörgåsbord of the arts spread thickly over a huge swathe of the county.

And this weekend sees the Canterbury Festival swing back into action for its annual two-week stay, offering everything from literature to live music and art to acrobats.

There are more than 200 events, both free and ticketed, taking place between now and Saturday, November 1, incorporating a host of venues and set to pull in more than 70,000 visitors.

Among the names appearing will be David Starkey, Simon Callow and Hugh Masekela.

With the festival now in its 31st year, director Rosie Turner is convinced it has become part of the fabric of the county.

She said: "I think the festival fills a very special place in the collective life of Canterbury and east Kent.

"We have a whole range of quality shows that wouldn't otherwise be seen in Canterbury and I think people look forward to seeing something different in the festival, and that's what keeps it alive.

"I think a lot of customers really do save their money for October."

City's cultural extravaganza integral part of arts calendar

Molly Kersey speaks to Rosie Turner, the lady tasked with putting together the ever-popular Canterbury Festival

It certainly sits well within a city famed for being perhaps the most cosmopolitan in the county.

Courtesy of the international appeal of its universities and the global attraction of its cathedral and streets awash with British history, it is no surprise that the festival will provide a showcase for a tremendous amount of international work.

Australian contemporary circus company Casus will be presenting the European premiere of its new show – Finding The Silence.

Ms Turner said: "They are a troupe of four incredible acrobats. They came last year – we were so blown away by their performance that we invited them back for a second year.

"What they can do with their bodies really has to be seen to be believed. It's thrilling to see them balanced on each others' shoulders."

Staying with the circus theme, Flown and Pirates Of The Carabina roll into The Marlowe Theatre next weekend. The troupe of acrobats, aerialists, daredevil stuntmen and musicians perform "in confidently choreographed chaos".

Other performance pieces will address some serious issues.

"It's not all about fun and games," said Ms Turner. "There's some very poignant and hard-hitting pieces of drama.

"One of them is called Inside – it's a one-woman play inspired by a true story about a poor girl who was taken hostage and locked in a basement for 12 years, and the play takes the form of her recording video messages to her mother.

"I think that's going to be one of the most intense experiences in

For its opening and closing concerts, the festival will return to the nave of Canterbury Cathedral, where world-renowned bass baritone Sir Willard White will perform.

The Marlowe Theatre will be hosting a number of events, with unashamedly brash comedian and mental-health campaigner Ruby Wax bringing her Sane New World show there.

Ms Turner said: "For me, the big initial highlight has got to be Hugh Masekela. He really is a living legend, known as much for his stance against the apartheid regime as his music.

This year's festival will also coincide with the British Arts Festivals Association (BAFA) national conference, which is being held at Canterbury Christ Church University.

Ms Turner said: "It's incredibly exciting to be able to show off not just the festival but the city of Canterbury."

sponsorship support.

It has maintained local-authority support and plans to work with the community to keep the festival in the public eye (see panel).

"The festival enjoys good relationships with a number of schools and all the universities in the city," Ms Turner said.

"The latest excitement in the festival office is that Canterbury Christ Church University has provided us with an office building, and we have just succeeded in raising enough funds to buy that from them."

And with this year's selection of intriguing and distinctive performances, the future looks promising.

Tickets for many events are still available. To find out more about the festival and the events that are taking place, you can visit www.canterburyfestival.co.uk.

FUNDING BOOST

THE Arts Council's continuing support for the Canterbury Festival is a key part of its financial survival.

This summer, the festival had its 'national portfolio organisation' status confirmed for another three years, meaning it will receive support more than £431,220.

A spokesman for the festival explained: "Although the festival earns most of its income from selling tickets, and also works hard to attract sponsorship and donations, funding from the Arts Council enables the festival to put on exciting international events and to work with young people and communities year-round.

"Funding from the Arts Council helps to keep ticket prices low and supports lots of events which are totally free to enjoy. As the festival's mission is to offer something for everybody, on-going funding is important to strengthen and widen the programme and reach new audiences."

The festival also received a grant from Arts Council England under the Small Capital Scheme. This sum enabled it to buy and refurbish its headquarters in Canterbury by topping up the sum of £300,000 already raised through fund-raising events and donations.

Star Wars rumour falls flat as work on Episode VII hots up

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

DESPITE persistent rumours that shooting of the new Star Wars movies could be made in Kent, it seems the Force will not be strong with this one.

Last year, it was widely reported Disney chiefs behind the new movies were interested in using a quarry close to the Bluewater shopping complex.

But now a number of sources close to the production unit say the likes of Han Solo, Princess Leia and Luke Skywalker – all being reprised by the original actors in the first of the new films due out next Christmas – will not be heading our way.

Much of the area is owned by property giant Land Securities and a source there said it had not been approached, as far as he knew.

But he was not in a position to rule out other plots of land in the area, although once more he had not heard of it happening.

And at the Kent Film Office, director Gabrielle Lindemann was at pains to dispel the rumours.

She told us: "If they intend to film in public, they have to come through us so we can sort out everything with the highways and councils.

"If it's on private land, usually we have an agreement that the location people let us know they are coming and we have to sign an agreement not to disclose anything.

"If that happened, I would pass on queries to the right publicity company.

"Having Stars Wars coming here is such an old rumour. My answer is that it's 99.9 per cent no. If something that big was coming to Kent, I am sure I would know about it. Location managers like to let us know."

STORMTROOPERS: But they won't be heading our way

The saga continues...

AFTER the mega-hits of the original trilogy of Star Wars films in the 1970s and 80s, the appetite for more movies continued to be ferocious.

When director George Lucas fulfilled fans' dreams by creating a prequel trilogy, cinemas were packed, but reviews were less than enthusiastic.

With Lucas vowing not to make any more, many feared a hopeful reunion of the original cast would remain nothing but a pipe dream.

But when Disney announced it was buying Lucasfilm in 2012 and planned a sequel to the original three movies, fans went into overload. The first film, Star Wars: Episode VII, will be released on December 18, 2015. It is being shot at Pinewood Studios in London and will star the likes of original stars Mark Hamill, Harrison Ford and Carrie Fisher.

From Downton with a message of hope

Famous faces will appear in two special free shows highlighting violence against girls and women

ONE of the stars of hit period drama Downton Abbey will escape the big house to hit the stage in one of two special free performances in Tonbridge this week.

The New Shoes Theatre production of the hard-hitting Hurried Steps takes place at the Angel Centre on Tuesday, with two performances.

Written by the internationally-acclaimed writer Dacia Maraini, Hurried Steps highlights the issue of violence against women and girls and "seeks to find an answer to the problem".

Appearing on stage will be Raquel Cassidy – Baxton in Downton Abbey and the wife of Jack Dee's character in hit BBC sit-com Lead Balloon.

She will read the Civita story, which draws attention to the End Sexual Violence In Conflict campaign.

Souda Faress, who plays Usha in Radio 4 soap The Archers, will also appear.

A spokesman for the company said: "Nine stories from around the world are brought to life using a stark and powerful style. The play is inspired by real testimonies from Amnesty International.

"The short no-frills performance stimulates a discussion between the audience and an interesting panel of dedicated local fieldworkers and domestic-violence experts who support families in the west Kent area. The panel will include DAVSS advocates North Kent Women's Aid and young women who are peer-mentors.

"This is a hard-hitting production suitable for ages 15 upwards."

Writer Dacia Maraini has spent her career addressing women's issues. She was nominated for the Nobel Prize for Literature and short-listed for the International Man Booker Prize.

Tickets for the event are free. Designed to work around the school run, the shows take place at 12.30pm and 7.30pm on Tuesday (October 21).

To reserve seats, phone 01732 772685 or reserve online at www.newshoestheatre.org.uk.

STAR: Raquel Cassidy will appear at Tonbridge's Angel Centre

Warming to Bath's grand designs

TRAVEL REVIEW: Bath

by Nilima Marshall

IN A year that celebrates the 300th anniversary of an era that was responsible for some of the UK's most elegant architecture, set amid high society, it seems only setting to take a visit to Bath and examine its links with the Georgian period.

We have checked into Villa Magdala, a beautiful Victorian house not far from the town centre that's been converted into a contemporary but cosy B&B with 23 stylish and tastefully-decorated rooms.

To begin our exploration of 18th-century Bath, we head over to the Royal Crescent, a row of 30 terraced houses, including a five-star hotel and museum, which is often used as a location for films and TV shows.

We arrive to find it bustling with tourists admiring the mighty Georgian architecture that stands out among the lush green lawns.

The crescent-shape theme also continues at the Circus, which, like the Royal Crescent, was designed by Georgian architects John Wood the Younger and his father John Wood the Elder. Apparently, the architects drew inspiration for the ring of town houses from the Colosseum in Rome.

Around the corner from the Circus is the Jane Austen Centre, where I learn more about the life and family of the famous 18th-century novelist.

All the staff at the centre (a Regency townhouse that has been repurposed) are appropriately dressed in historical costumes and I feel like I've entered into a period drama.

The centre also has a range of Regency-style dresses for tourists to try on, similar to what Austen would have worn when she went out with her sister Cassandra to visit the dressmaker, or call on friends.

STANDING THE TEST OF TIME: The wonderful architecture of the city is a primary factor in its enduring appeal

I find myself interested in Georgian fashion, so we head over to the Fashion Museum nearby to find out more.

At the entrance, we come across costumes that Lady Mary, Matthew Crawley and Lord Grantham were seen wearing on ITV's hit drama Downton Abbey.

The museum also has a huge variety of Georgian clothing worn by the fashionable society of that time.

We admire the dramatic, embellished ladies' gowns and the fitted embroidered waistcoats worn by style-conscious gentlemen.

Just like the architecture from that era, the Georgians also seemed to have left a lasting impact on the British fashion industry. Designer Vivienne Westwood took inspiration from the Regency era to create her Les Femmes collection S/S back in 1996. Her famous dramatic evening dress with oversized black bows is proudly displayed at the museum.

It's likely many high-society types throughout history would have come to Bath to bathe in its spa water. We decide to follow suit by heading over to the Thermae Bath Spa the following day. This modern-day public bath has a range of treatments on offer, but we opt for a two-hour relaxing bath session.

I feel my troubles melt away as I soak into a jacuzzi in the open-air roof-top pool as we take in clear views of the city.

We also try out the refreshing Minerva bath and complete our full session of relaxation in the fragrant steam rooms.

Rejuvenated, we stop at Roman Bath Kitchen (another Georgian townhouse that's been transformed into a contemporary restaurant) for lunch.

Following our food extravaganza, we head over to explore the Roman Baths. One of the busiest places in the city, the Roman Baths receive more than a million visitors a year.

Much of the original bath house that was built by the Romans does not exist today, but the main spring is now housed in buildings designed and restored by John Wood the Elder and his son.

Bath will leave you with plenty of wonderful weekend memories.

THE MAZE RUNNER (12A, 113 mins) Fantasy/Action/Thriller

Release: Now

BASED on the best-selling novel by James Dashner, the Maze Runner is a testosterone-fuelled survival thriller cast from the same robust mould as The Hunger Games and Divergent.

Like those dystopian nightmares, Wes Ball's film centres on naive characters teetering on the cusp of adulthood who are forced to make stark choices between life and death to secure freedom.

Only here, adolescent males are trapped in the moral mire and forced to establish a microcosm of self-governing society à la Lord Of The Flies in which the strongest take charge and the meek keep their heads down.

While The Hunger Games and Divergent expended valuable time establishing character back stories and motivations, this opening salvo of The Maze Runner employs a nifty cheat: amnesia.

All the protagonists are stripped bare of memories and identity, emerging from the darkness of a lift shaft into an enclosed green space before facing a daily struggle just to survive.

Director Ball doesn't succumb to squeamishness or sentimentality: death is quick and gruesome.

ANNABELLE (15, 99 mins) Horror/Thriller/Romance

Release date: Now

ACCORDING to the opening credits of Annabelle, dolls have frequently been used as conduits of evil.

Modern film-makers have had great fun transforming inanimate figures into demonic vessels.

This prequel to the 2013 supernatural horror The Conjuring fleshes out the blood-soaked history of a garish figurine called Annabelle, which sent chills down the spine in the first film and remains under lock and key in the home of real-life paranormal investigators Ed and Lorraine Warren.

Annabelle appropriates elements of Rosemary's Baby for an increasingly silly tale of demonic possession and maternal sacrifice.

Director Leonetti achieves a couple of decent scares, but when it comes to burrowing deep beneath our skin both he and scriptwriter Gary Dauberman fall short.

Visual effects are sparing, which is more than can be said of Joseph Bishara's deafening orchestral heavy that turns up the volume to 11.

Rating: 5/10

THE REWRITE (12A, 107 mins) Comedy/Romance

Release date: Now

TWENTY years ago, Hugh Grant donned his crown as floppy-haired prince regent of the romantic comedy in Four Weddings And A Funeral, winning a Bafta and Golden Globe for his efforts.

Notting Hill, About A Boy, Two Weeks Notice and Love Actually and a recurring role as a bouncer in the Bridget Jones films have enforced his screen image as the bumbling bachelor who inadvertently insults the girl but still wins her heart.

The Rewrite, which reunites Grant with director Marc Lawrence for the fourth time, won't alter that perception.

Light, frothy and utterly forgettable, this flimsy tale of second-chance love and self-acceptance plays to the leading man's strengths, endearing us to his morally-flawed character despite a propensity for the occasional fib and social faux pas.

Grant could deliver this performance in his sleep, so it's fortunate he's nuzzled by a solid supporting cast including Marisa Tomei as his potential love interest and the always glorious Allison Janney as a humourless Jane Austen scholar who won't tolerate unethical behaviour among her faculty colleagues.

Hugh sees food in a completely new light

By Keeley Bolger

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A FEW years ago, Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall was startled to learn that he had high cholesterol.

A lover of home-grown veg, who has always "eaten salads and fruit", the 49-year-old admits that his GP's diagnosis took him by surprise.

"I thought I was basically very healthy," says Fearnley-Whittingstall, who lives in Devon with his wife Marie and their four children.

"I felt more or less pretty good most of the time, but then I stopped and thought 'Well, actually, you do slap the butter on a bit too much on your morning toast, and if the cheese is out at the end of a meal and you've got a glass of wine on the go, you do go back there for a bit more'."

Although both toast and cheese are admittedly "pleasant", the TV chef and food writer has been conscientiously shifting towards recipes that don't rely on wheat and dairy, writing up his findings in his new book, River Cottage Light & Easy.

Emphasising foods that are "perhaps a little bit better for you", Fearnley-Whittingstall, who went vegetarian while he wrote his landmark River Cottage Veg book, is a convert to his own method.

Best of all, his cholesterol is now in the normal range. And despite being a self-confessed "toast muncher", he has enjoyed finding new ways of cooking.

These days, he eats dairy and wheat but doesn't rely on them as "go to" ingredients. Though he does make some exceptions...

"When my wife has made a fantastic sourdough loaf, or I go round to some friends and they've baked a lovely cake, that's when I'm going to go 'Of course I'm going to have some of that'," says the foodie, known for his campaigning Channel 4 food programmes Hugh's Fish Fight and Hugh's Chicken Run.

At home, both he and his wife share the dinner duties, but when Marie's at the cooking coalface Fearnley-Whittingstall knows to make himself scarce.

"If my wife's cooking, it's probably best to let her get on with it, because I do have a terrible tendency to butt in and interfere," he admits, grinning.

"Even if I'm looking at her while she's cooking, she can find that a bit annoying, so I'll go and do some gardening."

The family are often treated to home-cooked meals cooked by the eldest children, too, something that clearly fills the chef with pride.

"I've got much better at making a bit of room, not just for my wife but for my elder kids Chloe, who's 18, and Oscar, who's 15," explains the food writer.

"They're both keen cooks and are more than capable of putting together a family meal. So sometimes we can both take an evening off, relax in the garden and take the dog for a walk, and come back and find a pretty delicious supper on the table."

The only downfall is that the children sometimes "suggest we do the clearing up" afterwards, he adds, laughing. But donning the marigolds is a small price to pay for getting his kids interested in cooking.

"I do think that all kids have a natural curiosity about food and a natural inclination to get involved in the kitchen," he says.

He concedes that involving the kids isn't "easy for everyone", especially with time and space constraints, but adds: "If you nurture that curiosity and give a little bit of independence in the kitchen, you do them the most fantastic life service."

Freddy, 11, and four-year-old Louisa are too young to be whipping up meals like their older siblings, but Fearnley-Whittingstall, who also cooked from a young age, is keen that "whatever trials and tribulations lie ahead", all his children leave home knowing how to cook for themselves.

"It's not just about your health," he says. "It's about your well-being and sense of self respect. I think that counts for a huge amount... It's [that sense of] 'I can cook for myself, I can look after myself'."

TASTE SENSATION: Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall was shocked by his GP

An accident just waiting to happen

I AM writing regarding a recent article about heavy traffic use on roads not built for such vehicles.

A major concern of mine and of many others is Shottendane Road, Margate, between Twenties Cottages and the top of Garlinge High Street.

If this road were to be inspected/monitored by the powers that be, it would soon become obvious that this is a 'rat run' not only for cars at high speed but for very big lorries, presumably making their way to either Margate or Westwood Cross.

Some years ago the railway bridge on Canterbury Road at Westbrook was under a construction upgrade and traffic was diverted via the unsuitable width of Shottendane Road.

When the bridge was eventually reopened, it seems that heavy vehicle traffic continued to use Shottendane Road.

We have speculated that sat nav may be directing unsuitable heavy vehicle traffic down this road.

On this stretch of road there is an establishment with stables where the only way out for riders is to negotiate this dangerous road. I can remember several near-misses for horse and rider and one time a horse actually being put down due to injuries sustained.

This is not a good situation for the livery yard trying to attract clients.

Only the very experienced rider would consider it. Also on this stretch is Hengrove Farm with large machinery leaving and entering the farm all year round.

The width of this road is just 15ft. I don't know the legalities of the situation, but surely it is not acceptable to have such traffic on such a narrow road?

It is only a matter of time before there is a really serious accident on this stretch that could have been avoided.

Pounds before the needs of patients

ORDINARY hard-working GPs in Kent are paid, on average, £73.56 to look after a patient for a year.

Try getting 10 minutes with a doctor in the US for that.

This government, however, is so keen to sell off the NHS to the private sector that it has put a Dymchurch practice out to tender at £100 per patient – in other words 35 per cent extra.

Of course, not all this will go to patient care – some has to reward shareholders.

If they don't think they can get serious bidders for less than £100 per patient, how do they expect ordinary GPs dedicated to the NHS to provide a good-quality service for so much less?

This insult is compounded by the Government already cutting £1 billion from the primary care budget.

When asked whether they intend to pay other GPs the same, which would be a more realistic sum for providing a quality service, you can imagine the response from NHS England.

This is happening across the country and the public must wake up to what is happening to the NHS before it no longer exists.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Going Dutch could answer flooding woe

FOR as long as I can remember, both Yalding and the centre of Maidstone have been flooded regularly.

Yalding is on a flood plain of the Medway, and the Medway itself is really quite small and just cannot take the quantities of water draining into it when heavy rains occur. Nothing new here.

The solution will be based on the following:

1. Increase the depth and width of the Medway channel downriver past Wouldham.
2. Lower the level of the river above Allington as soon as heavy rains are forecast. This will mean thinking about the boats on the various moorings and how to keep them safe. Perhaps by digging out lagoons in the banks to create areas away from the river flow as seen in Allington Marina.
3. Dig a rather large hole below Yalding that is kept empty until the Medway threatens flooding and then allow the water to flow into this pit.

4. Build a large underground pipe, 12 feet in diameter, into which water is pumped from the river to bypass the river and take the water to Wouldham.
5. Bring in Dutch engineers to solve the problem. Some 30 per cent of houses in The Netherlands are below the level of the North Sea and they do not flood. The Dutch have knowledge and understanding of water flows that the tadpole-collectors at the Environment Agency just do not have.

The current solution, based on a year's work, is to tell the homeowners more quickly when their houses are going to flood.

These houses should not have been built on this flood plain in the first place until the water levels were made safe.

Boris proves he's out of touch, again

I'M not sure what happens in Boris Johnson's private life, but he does appear to have an intimate knowledge of the sex life of a vacuum cleaner (KoS, last week).

He also seems to think Ukup supporters are born-again members of his 'old boys' club'.

Not so here in Kent.

The first roots of what is now Great Britain started 2,000 years ago when the Roman gateway to Britain was Richborough in east Kent.

St Augustine, Hengist and Horsa and William the Norman (he never conquered Kent) followed, as would wannabes Napoleon and Hitler.

Out of Kent came England, leading to the Empire, now the Commonwealth.

Don't underestimate east Kent, Boris.

Nigel Farage may have historically chosen wisely in starting his People's Army's march on Parliament in Kent. It has an excellent historical record. Stick to buffoonery and vacuum cleaners, Mr Johnson.

David Steed, Manston

Check your facts ...and your speed

I READ Gerry Cross's letter with interest (KoS, last week) as he is probably referring to some of my letters that have been published.

Firstly, he states that drivers like me "believe the rights of motorist should trump all others".

This is a total fallacy for it was the last Labour government that laid down a fixed road-user hierarchy list in which the private car-driver came last, and this list is fully supported by Conservative transport policies.

I would suggest that when out driving you check the speed limit and the speeds people actually are driving at (despite the threat of prosecution) to see what you call the "quiet majority" really think.

As for "keep your opinions to yourself", this is called free speech, something that is becoming gradually eradicated with more controls of what can, or cannot, be said.

Terry Hudson, Whitstable

Sort it out, Gills

GILLINGHAM'S footballers are in a poor run of form and the spectre of relegation is very much present.

Such an event would bring to a halt any momentum gathered at the club. It really must not happen.

GLOVE WORK: Be ready to plant those bulbs with a coordinated approach

Diarmuid digs the dirt on getting your garden into shape

AFTER a glorious summer at home pottering around his garden, green-fingered TV presenter Diarmuid Gavin is now preparing his beds for the cooler months.

"Things in my own garden are beginning to die back," he explains. "I have some wisterias I've been training up a cast-iron verandah and underneath that I will be ripping out some perennials that haven't been happy in my garden, like a trochodendron that has looked sickly and has black spots under the leaf."

He swears by the following tips for renewal and regeneration that will help your garden withstand the cooler months and ensure it is in good condition for the year ahead.

THE LAWN

"It's time to get ready for renewal and the first thing to look at is the lawn, which has probably been battered by kids running all over it in the summer holidays.

"A really good maintenance session, scarifying, aerating and topping up the roots of the grass plants with some autumn fertiliser will make a massive difference," he says. "Really getting stuck in with a spring time rake to remove all the thatch is an incredibly satisfying job."

"For a couple of weeks, the lawn will look like you've demolished it, but later on it will improve its condition. It's all about toughening it up to get it ready for winter. Spiking it and aerating it really allows the oxygen to get right down to the roots but also releases some of the other bad gases that may have built up. Be cruel to be kind."

PROLONG THE SEASON

Continue to deadhead anything

that's still in flower, but also visit your local garden centre to see what's coming into flower.

"Some of the autumn sedums are fantastic and encourage butterflies, so you could drop in some spot colour before the frost comes. Dahlias such as Bishop of Llandaff with bright flowers and deep purple foliage look fantastic now, so put them in pots in the border."

"Some of the Japanese anemones also look fantastic and there's plenty of scope for using spot colour in the garden. You don't have to give up just yet. Even some of the exotic-looking cannas, such as Canna Tropicanna, are looking good now."

CLEAR UP LEAVES

You'll have to rake up fallen leaves or they will suffocate any plant life underneath them and provide shelter for pests. If you have lots of leaves and

"I'm planning to take out fencing panels and plant beech or a mixture of beech and holly hedges in a client's garden in Sheffield."

"Get rid of non-descript shrubs like forsythias and if you want a hedge prepare the soil now."

"Autumn and winter is a great time for this because you're not battling against slugs, the lawn isn't growing at the rate it was and you have time to invest in one or two big projects."

PLANT BULBS

Bulbs have been in garden centres for the last eight weeks and now it's worth having a coordinated approach to this, considering what you want to achieve, whether it's bulbs in pots around the front door, or in drifts in a lawn – you can coordinate that with your lawn aeration – or in through the beds and borders.

"There's no point in buying a dozen daffodils and planting them in a row because they'll look terrible. You have to plan and invest. Maybe buy a 5kg bag of daffodils and plant them in drifts rather than placing them one by one."

"Throw them on the ground and see where they land, which will give you the most naturalistic planting. Plant them at least twice their depth and give them a bit of feed if you want them to be vigorous."

"The secret is, don't skimp on bulbs."

"The only place you can skimp is if you're just putting them in pots."

enough space, make leaf mould by putting your leaves into dustbin liners with air holes in them and leave them to rot down to make a great mulch. It does, however, take a year or so for the leaves to break down sufficiently.

HERBACEOUS PERENNIALS

Tidy up herbaceous perennials that are flopping or have developed rust.

In a month's time, you can start to lift and divide perennials to renew their vigour and produce new plants. Out of one clump, you may get seven or eight smaller ones. Replant them, digging organic matter into the soil at the same time and they should give you a good show next year.

CHECK YOUR SOIL

Autumn is a good time to check to see how your soil is doing. Prepare to do a big mulch and buy in some organic material.

"Planning is key," he adds. "If the garden has produced the goods for you this year – and for most people it's been a really bountiful year – you want to condition the soil. See what will need to be mulched and enriched and order your manure to be delivered, before everyone else does."

CONSIDER FENCING

If your fencing has fallen down or broken, consider planting a hedge to replace it in the autumn.

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IF YOU'VE outgrown your home and you can make it bigger by building an extension or converting the loft, cellar or garage, doing the work is often more economical than moving.

It also gives you an opportunity to create space tailored exactly to your needs.

That said, be careful not to get carried away and enlarge your home in the wrong way. For example, if you convert the loft into an extra bedroom or bedrooms and there isn't enough living space downstairs for the total number of bedrooms, you'll have made the house too top-heavy.

It's often said that the rooms that most sell homes are the kitchen and bathroom because replacing them is expensive and disruptive so buyers don't want to do it themselves.

Swapping a dated kitchen or bathroom for a modern one will make a big difference to your everyday life, too, and you don't need a second mortgage to pay for it.

A good way to get a bargain kitchen is to buy inexpensive units and even cupboard doors, then spend more on the worktops – oak-block ones are stunning but needn't be costly if you buy them online – and a statement tap and/or sink.

Try a local DIY store for reasonable takeaway units – an IT Kitchens 1,000mm White Base Carcass is just £38 at B&Q, for example.

Takeaway units are ideal if you're in a hurry or not sure about the layout because if you find you need one size instead of another you can simply go to the store and get it.

DIY stores are also a source of reasonable bathrooms – budget buys can be dressed up with nice tiles and taps – Mira Showers has a new range of beautifully-designed and engineered bathroom taps (see www.mirashowers-store.co.uk).

mirashowers-store.co.uk).

Adding bathrooms, especially an en-suite, is a great way to up-value and make your home life easier, especially if there are too many people using the family bathroom.

This is when an en-suite for the main bedroom is invaluable. People sometimes think that having as many bedrooms as possible adds value, but it's usually more valuable to have enough bathrooms for the number of bedrooms.

It's also useful to have a bathroom on every floor where there are bedrooms. Loft-conversion bedrooms with a bathroom or shower room are usually more valuable and useful than those without.

In family homes, a downstairs toilet is a must, too, even if you have to squeeze it into a small space, such as the under-stairs cupboard.

Another must for families these days is open-plan living space. Where once separate dining rooms and kitchens were popular, now the trend is for open-plan kitchen-diners/family rooms where the whole family can be together.

However, totally open-plan space isn't necessarily the best way to add value or live day to day.

Having a more formal sitting room, as well as a more casual room, works well for many families, so do get out your sledgehammer... but don't go mad with it.

EYE ON THE JOB: Building a storage cupboard in the kitchen is a good way of adding value to this important room

Are you sitting comfortably? Then you've made the perfect choice

YOU just know when you've found 'the one'. Supportive, and always there for you when you need comfort, a snuggle or just to relax, writes Gabrielle Fagan.

I'm not talking about a partner but the sometimes more tricky matter of getting the right seating partner: a sofa. Bear in mind you'll probably live with it for 10 years or more – a pretty long-lasting relationship – and it becomes even more apparent how key that choice is.

But with so much to consider, from size (which, in this case, does matter) through to shape and colour, never mind sorting through a seemingly endless array of ranges, finding the perfect match for you and your home can be daunting.

"People often go to enormous lengths choosing a sofa, not just because this is a costly item but also because it's the most important piece of furniture in a living room. It can literally make or break the look of a setting," says Malcolm Walker, buying director at Furniture Village.

"We find people may even delay long getting rid of an old sofa because it holds memories. It's understandable there's an emotional attachment to something on which we've spent so much time."

Fabrics should go through a rub test during manufacture, so look for those with a rub count of more than 20,000 for durability. Choose fabrics appropriate to your lifestyle – those with pile, such as velvet or soft, aniline leathers, rarely survive the onslaught of a young family and pets without sustaining damage.

Alternatively, loose covers can be removed and washed, and choosing them in two colours or patterns means they can be switched to suit different seasons.

A JOY TO BEHOLD: The Volvo V40 R-Design certainly looks good although the same powertrain is also available in a chunky Cross Country garb

Star given star power options

IT'S every carmaker's dream: making a good car even better. So it is with new powertrain options for the Volvo V40, the Swedish premium marque's current star car, though the eagerly-awaited all-new XC90 SUV arrives soon.

The racy V40 – a family hatchback that makes the VW Golf look dull as dishwater – is now available with new Drive-E engines and gearboxes delivering driver appeal, plus greater economy and lower emissions than before.

It's a formula that has already enabled Volvo to make great inroads into the company-car market but is highlighted now by the powerful 190bhp D4 Drive-E diesel/manual combo available on the V40 (from £24,570).

This offers 99g/km CO₂ and an official combined 74.3mpg consumption yet is good for 0-62mph in just 7.4 seconds.

Ally this with a skilled blend of decent ride and surefooted handling and you have a car that ticks many boxes and looks good, too,

Volvo injects more ecopower into its slick best-selling V40 hatchback to draw company 'user-choosers' and private buyers alike, says Steve Loader particularly in sporty R-Design trim, though the same powertrain is also available in chunky, higher-riding Cross Country garb: 104g/km and 70.6mpg combined, with acceleration slightly compromised at 7.7 seconds.

I drove both trims and came down firmly for the R-Design on looks, driveability and cost – the country-set image of the Cross Country adds about £550.

Both trims are also available with Volvo's new highly-flexible eight-speed Geartronic automatic gearbox. For those who often get stuck in commuter traffic but like to push on when they can, this is a classy yet eco-friendly option: 109g/km and 67.3mpg combined for R-Design.

For more fun, though, Volvo has added a sporty Drive-E V40 halo option: the 245bhp petrol T5 (0-62mph in 6.3 seconds) with the eight-speeder auto as standard. It won't be a big seller but does have surprisingly good eco credentials: 137g/km CO₂ emissions and 47.9mpg combined.

PACKED: Volvo has also produced a high-riding Cross Country version

Toyota's city baby might be another clone, but it's hard to beat for funky eye-catching urban appeal, writes Steve Loader

Aygo... funkmaster city car that's streets ahead

If you like wordplay, Toyota's Aygo city car will amuse you. Pronounced 'I go', Toyota hopes it makes you think 'mobility and freedom', but it's also a simple definition of what we actually need from our vehicles.

For the Aygo (from £8,595) and other city cars are probably what carmakers would rather not make, being relatively expensive and less profitable to produce.

They also make a good fist of doing most of what bigger and far more expensive cars do and are compact and economical – a double wake-up call to increasingly hard-pressed consumers. They also look like great fun, especially in the case of the Aygo.

To keep city-car development and production costs down, most manufacturers now pool resources and clone several cars from one project.

So, for the second time around, Toyota has teamed up with Peugeot and Citroën, the Peugeot 108 and Citroën C1 being sisters to the Aygo.

But visual differences between the French pair and the Toyota are quite marked this time, highlighted by different rear window lines and the Aygo's distinctive 'X' motif across the front end and equally original rear.

Indeed, Toyota is known for designing cars that attract few admiring glances but offend nobody, but it has acted out of character and created a head-turner here, helped by umpteen customisation options and cutting-edge infotainment.

In short, the four-seat Aygo is probably the most eye-catching and funkiest of city cars, with the five-door, which commands a £400 premium, easily the best-looking and most practical of the two body options; rear-seat access for the three-door is awkward and the view out for smaller passengers is not great, even if there's plenty of room once seated.

On the face of it, there's not much to excite on the power front: the previous Aygo's 68bhp 1.0-litre three-cylinder petrol engine plus five-speed box has been retained.

On the other hand, why change a winner when it delivers a road-tax-exempt 95g/km CO2 emissions and offers 68.9mpg?

That's an official combined cycle figure not far from the real-world economy I achieved during a week with the car despite subjecting it to crawling stop-go town traffic and a lengthy motorway cruise.

However, at this price and size there have to be compromises and the Aygo's ride quality can be fidgety, while the engine can be noisy as it

HEAD-TURNER: Toyota has created a car that will attract admiring looks whizzes its leisurely way to a claimed 0-62mph in 14.2 seconds. It is easily outperformed for composure by the rival VW Up and cloned Skoda and SEAT sisters.

Nevertheless, Toyota's five-year/100,000-mile warranty goes a long way to counter that and, for a small car, it certainly makes a big impression.

Victory this weekend at Brands Hatch and one of our favourite sporting heroes will be in the record books but

THIS weekend our very own Shane 'Shakey' Byrne aims to make motorsport history when he bids to become the first rider to take four British Superbike Championship titles.

The Sittingbourne rider is on his home turf of Brands Hatch, where 50,000 fans are expected to assemble for the crowning of this year's king of the circuit. The majority will be hoping that coronation to be of Byrne, but there is one major obstacle: Japanese rider Ryuichi Kiyonari.

In a delicious twist of fate, Kiyonari is also a three-time BSB winner. Hence, in something that might have come straight out of the world of boxing, the event has been termed the War For Four.

Byrne holds a slender 12-point lead over 'Kiyo' and the destination of this year's title will be decided over three races over both days of the weekend.

It's an irony that, with such a momentous achievement within his grasp, Byrne has not enjoyed one of his smoother seasons.

"It's been tough at times," he said.

"I wouldn't put it down as one of my favourite seasons. There was a lean spell in the middle when I just didn't seem able to win a race. But then I won the second race at Assen and it was a real boost when I really needed it."

Sometimes in Kent we have to struggle to claim sportsmen as our own, but there's no such problem with Byrne.

"I grew up in Sittingbourne, where my mum still lives, and have a house on Sheppey. We've also got a place in Spain and we try to nip off there when we can.

"We used to spend three or four months a year out there, but now my son Zack is back at school and my daughter Lily is at nursery our former lifestyle has gone a bit."

Spain is doubtless missed, but Byrne is still enjoying life in his home county.

"I love Brands. It's my home track and I spend quite a lot of time there doing TV and things like meeting motorsport fans. One day it would be great to get a job there."

The culmination of the season at Brands entails the Showdown, a complex system in which the top six riders throughout the year are elevated to Title Fighter status, meaning their scores are reset to 500, to which are added the Podium Points that have been accrued through the season (five for a win, three for a second place and one from third).

Got it?

"I spoke to them [the competition organisers] about modifying the Showdown to make it more interesting," said Byrne.

"And I think they listened to me. I think it's good that they were prepared to modify the event."

Does the system not negate all the good work that has been done by the championship leaders during the year, though?

"I'm really, really glad you said that," said Byrne. "Yes, if you're way out in front it can be difficult to swallow when you've probably done enough to take the title in a conventional championship."

"But the way the rules are in Super-

Shakey focused on superbike showdown and place in history bikes means we keep the final rounds interesting. The Showdown is not a game of chess. It's ultimately where the championship is decided.

"In 2008 I'd won it with four rounds to go and nobody turned up for the last rounds. It was the same in 2009, when Leon Camier [also a Kent rider] was way out in front.

“ Anyone on his day can win a race. People appreciate Superbikes and it's nice for riders to get recognition for the job they do rather than the bikes ”

Shane Byrne,
on his passion for the sport

"So I totally get what they're doing with the Showdown. This is what we've primed for all season."

The extraordinary success he has enjoyed in the format doubtless helps, but British Superbikes could have no greater advocate than Byrne.

"It's the best spectacle of bike-racing in the world," he said.

"MotoGP is undoubtedly the pinnacle and everyone aspires to that because it's a little bit random.

"But here anyone on his day can win a race and people love it – my Twitter account is off the wall. People appreciate Superbikes and it's nice for riders to get recognition for the job they do rather than the bikes.

"In MotoGP the difference in machinery is so great that a bike can work on one track and not on others.

"In Superbikes, though, Honda, Kawasaki, Suzuki, Yamaha and BMW can all win in any race.

"MotoGP doesn't interest me. I want to get a bike that will allow me to do the job I need to do.

"I enjoy winning at Superbikes, where it's all about hard work, determination and pain.

"As for MotoGP, why should I race people I've beaten but they've now got a better bike than me?"

He's a jolly fellow, Byrne, and he's invariably good with the Press.

You suspect his cheery demeanour is a combination of natural affability and a love of what he's doing.

"I'm a lad from a council estate in Sittingbourne, so I appreciate everything I've got," he said. "From the time I bought my first bike and when I took myself to my first race, I've done this myself and I love every minute of it."

Hopefully he will be loving it more than ever at the end of today as he takes the War For Four.

■ Race-day admission at Brands Hatch today, when two of the three races are being held, is £32.

Yarnold pre-selected for GB skeleton squad

GONG CRAZY: Lizzy Yarnold receives the county council's Invicta Award

WEST Kingsdown's Olympic gold-medal-winner Lizzy Yarnold has been pre-selected for Great Britain's skeleton World Cup squad.

Yarnold, who won gold at Sochi and was overall World Cup champion for 2013-14, will be travelling to Lillehammer in Norway for a training camp.

The fact she has been pre-selected means Yarnold will not be required to take part in GB's World Cup selection races taking place in Winterberg, Germany, next month.

Yarnold held the World Cup Leader yellow vest for the whole of last season after finishing on the podium in seven out of eight World Cup races, including four gold medals.

Her season culminated with the gold medal at Sochi, where the 25-year old secured Great Britain's fourth consecutive Olympic medal in the skeleton since the sport was reintroduced to the Olympic programme in Salt Lake City in 2002.

Following her pre-selection, Yarnold said: "The Olympics was one of the best moments of my life and I've been able to do some fabulous things since then, but now I'm a focused athlete again and I need to concentrate on having a successful World Cup season."

We let down the fans, says Gills boss Taylor after loss

GILLINGHAM manager Peter Taylor has said his side let down the fans at Priestfield in their 3-0 defeat to Scunthorpe United on Saturday last week.

Captain Doug Loft's dismissal in the 34th minute played a big part in how the match developed as the visitors inflicted Gills' first home league defeat of the season.

"A very disappointing day, not just the result but, to me, apart from the first minute, there wasn't enough about us," Taylor told the club website in the aftermath of the game.

"I can only hold my hands up to say that it's not good enough and we've let a lot of people down.

"I know what they [the players] are capable of doing and I would hope they are disappointed with the standard. They know they are better than that.

"I just hope they are feeling the same way as me at the minute.

"We have let our supporters down. There were 7,000 people here, which is a fantastic attendance, and those are the days where you are desperate to show them what you are capable of doing and unfortunately we have shown them a negative side.

"I don't think we are that far away from being a decent team, but we didn't show it today."
